The girl on the motorbike

In the early hours of 5 April 1989 a motorbike was speeding along the A20 in Kent. The night was dark and there was very little traffic on the road. Clive Taylor was in a hurry to get home. He had left London later than expected. But now he was out in the country and he was making good time.

As he approached Wrotham Hill, he glanced at his watch. Exactly two o'clock. He changed gear and sped up the hill. A minute later he reached the bend at the top of the hill. It was a dangerous place for accidents. But with so little traffic on the road, Clive didn't slow down.

Suddenly, he saw a girl. She was standing in the middle of the road. When he had stopped, the girl calmly walked up to him and asked him for a lift. She said that there had been an accident. Clive looked around, but he couldn't see a car or any other people. Clive told her to get on and to hold tight. As the girl climbed on, he suddenly felt very cold, but he noticed that she was only wearing a light dress. She looked as if she was on her way to a party.

They rode on down the hill, and at one point Clive thought that she shouted something, but he couldn't hear very well over the noise of the motorbike's engine.

At the bottom of the hill there was a telephone box so Clive stopped there. But when he turned round, he froze in horror. The girl wasn't there, she had gone. Clive rode back up to the spot where he had first seen the girl, but he couldn't see her.

Clive was desperate. He rode as fast as he could to the nearest town and found the police station. He told the policeman at the desk what had happened. To his surprise, the policeman didn't seem very worried.

Then he told Clive that ten years before, there had been an accident on Wrotham Hill. A girl and her boyfriend had been on their way back from a party when she had fallen off the motorbike and been killed. Since that time several motorcyclists had seen the girl. The accident had happened at exactly five past two.
